Does that make the tag meaningless? Do we need another tag for CoffeeScript? A: At the moment, they're both in need of cleanup and refinement. Coffee-app: It is currently broad, there are at least five or six very different kinds of apps, and a few of them are actually not even about coffee. This is confusing for prospective users, and I don't think the scope of the tag is well defined. In addition, most of the questions are about Java, which doesn't help the question, and JavaScript-based questions are often still about CoffeeScript, which is usually a secondary question to the question. CoffeeScript: It's being used for questions about both CoffeeScript, and Javascript, which is really a misuse of the tag. At some point, the CoffeeScript tag should probably be burminated. At that point, we should also get rid of the coffee tag. The CoffeeScript tag also has at least one tag synonym, but the tag is short, and could probably be removed altogether. It has zero wiki at the moment. Both these tags have at least one tag wiki that's still empty. I suggest removing any tag wiki that's empty (if they have one) and adding an empty tag wiki (if they don't). Q: How to make a button run a method after pressed and then released?
