Full Text Available Bioelectrochemical systems (BESs based on bacteria are emerging as promising systems for the remediation of radioactive waste and removal of radionuclide from the environment. BESs with strains of bacteria of the genus Acidithiobacillus have been used to remove the toxic elements in the waste generated from the nuclear power plants (Reza et al., 2008; Reza et al., 2009; Takagaki et al., 2010; Rzeszotarski et al., 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014; Wickramage et al., 2015; Yao et al., 2015; Formaz et al., 2016; Soltani et al., 2016; Talbegi et al., 2017; Wattappan et al., 2017; Kamada et al., 2018; Rahman et al., 2018. The current study was undertaken to assess the efficiency of an acidithiobacillus-based BES to decontaminate the copper leaching solutions from nuclear waste contaminated soil. On the basis of the results of the one-pot experiments, the removal efficiency of copper was 80-90% and in two-pot experiments (one-pot of strain C1, two-pots of strain C1/C2) removal efficiency of copper was 90-100%. The nutrient media for the one-pot experiment included: 6.3 mM gluconic acid, 0.13 M KCl, 0.067 M MgSO 4.7H<sub>2</sub>O, 0.067 M KH<sub>2</sub>PO<sub>4</sub>.

well known and comprise a supply of a cleaning composition, a water spray system and a control system. Typically, the cleaning composition is a solution or gel of a detergent type, water and/or rinsing chemicals. Typically, the cleaning composition is pumped into a reservoir or tank, and is subsequently mixed with water from the reservoir, either during or immediately before pumping into the water spray system. When used in an automatic system, the control system
