The objective of this R01 application is to develop and implement an intervention that can be used in real-world clinical settings to reduce pain and restore function in people who experience foot and ankle pain. The specific aim is to integrate evidenced-based physical therapy interventions with an automatic medication dosing system and self- management skills to improve effectiveness in reducing pain and restoring function in people who experience foot and ankle pain. The proposal, entitled "The Interdisciplinary Medication Dosing System for Pain and Function Rehabilitation" (IMaDESIS), consists of a home-based treatment program that is delivered in an individualized fashion by a licensed physical therapist, complemented by use of an automated medication dosing system, the Medicate program. The IMaDESIS treatment will be compared to a minimal intervention (standard care) to determine whether the treatment effects are maintained over time. A secondary aim is to compare the treatment effects of IMaDESIS to medication alone. The proposed study is a randomized clinical trial. Subjects will be randomly assigned to one of the following groups: (1) home-based IMaDESIS treatment;(2) home-based standard care treatment;(3) IMaDESIS treatment + use of an automatic medication dosing system;(4) standard care treatment + use of an automatic medication dosing system;(5) medication alone. Subjects will receive treatment for 6 weeks with weekly telephone contact for monitoring and encouragement of compliance. The primary outcome will be change in pain (using a modified form of the Fibromyalgia Pain Questionnaire) from baseline to week 6. Secondary outcomes include functional status, physical activity, pain catastrophizing, and medication adherence. This study addresses an important problem of how to use physical therapy in a cost-effective way to manage pain and restore 2d92ce491b
