- The former leader of North Korea's ruling party, who abruptly defected to South Korea last week, said he had been "betrayed" by Kim Jong Un, the isolated state's leader, at a news conference in Seoul on Wednesday. "For a long time, I had some contact with him, especially when he was younger. He was a very bright, very bright child," Ri Yong Ho told a news conference attended by South Korea's national security director, Chung Eui-yong, and several senior officials. "When he was 19 years old, I was so surprised I threw away a bottle of mineral water he had just given to me... When I was in Pyongyang, in April 2016, he personally called me and said 'I will never let you come to the DPRK'." When asked what he meant by DPRK, Ri said: "The Democratic People's Republic of Korea." He said he had not wanted to defect until August 2016, when he and his family had a plan to defect to the United States, but the South Korean national intelligence agency had pushed him to do so.
