Flanked by senior Israeli military and intelligence officials and admitting for the first time that Israel did target Iranian facilities, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Defense Minister Ehud Barak formally apologized on Tuesday for what was "a regrettable mistake." The Israeli leaders who described what they did as "hot action" during the 50-day war in Gaza – which ended in a cease-fire in August – were speaking as they were to representatives of the United Nations and other countries. The Israeli leaders' statements, which the governments had hoped to keep secret, were delivered to the UN Security Council by Ambassador Gabriela Shalev and to the Geneva Conference on the Middle East by former Israeli UN ambassador Dan Gillerman. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Tuesday apologized to the United Nations for killing of Palestinian civilians during the 2014 Gaza war. (Image source: AP) In a lengthy, prepared statement, Netanyahu said Israel did not intend to harm civilians or damage civilian infrastructure during the three-week conflict, and that Israel did not bear "criminal responsibility for every rocket that was fired" by the Palestinians. "For all the rocket attacks and strikes from the Gaza Strip, the number of Israeli civilian casualties was a tiny fraction compared to the number of attacks and strikes by the Palestinian terrorist organizations," Netanyahu said. "In response to these attacks, I ordered the Israel Defense Forces to respond robustly." Netanyahu stressed that "Israel takes all the necessary precautions to avoid harming civilians, and it bears no criminal responsibility for the actions of terror groups, even when they are not responsible for the attack." Defense Minister Ehud Barak explained Israel's military strategy at the time, according to a government statement. "During the operation we were under orders from the chief of staff to act aggressively against Iran's infrastructure, including weapons infrastructure, in order to prevent Iranian terror, ♦
