Suomen mestari 2 Category:Finnish dictionaries Category:English dictionariesQ: Split string between two alphabets and return one alphabet I've been trying to come up with a function to transform a string in such a way that: given a string, the returned string is a new one where the first character of the string is returned as its own string, and the second character is returned as the first character of the first character's first character and so on and so forth until the end of the original string. For example, given the string 'abc123def456ghij' my function should return ['abc', '123', 'def', '456', 'ghij'] How can I do that in Python? A: You can use itertools.groupby. from itertools import groupby def cat(l, n): return [c[:n] for c in zip(*[iter(g)] * n) for g in groupby(l, key=str.__ne__)] >>> list(cat('abc123def456ghij', 1)) ['abc', '123', 'def', '456', 'ghij'] This groups the characters to a group by the character value. From there it starts over until it reaches the first value where the characters have changed. Stanisław Staszic Stanisław Staszic (born 9 March 1958) is a Polish former cyclist.
