'Nanobox' Will Deliver Your Pics To Google 'Google Photos' published:11 Jun 2018 'Nanobox' Will Deliver Your Pics To Google 'Google Photos' 'Nanobox' Will Deliver Your Pics To Google 'Google Photos' published:11 Jun 2018 views:206532 Google is reportedly testing a new feature in Google Photos called "Nanobox". It allows users to go back and forth between an image in your photo library and the image in a remote image host such as Google Photos or OneDrive. ""Nanobox". Nanobox allows users to immediately transition images between their Google account and a remote image host. It is a great example of how Google is tying the smarts of image management into local and remote service. There are two ways to use Nanobox: 1. Create a new album for your remote photos, then save the album's path to Google Photos. 2. Upload a folder of images to Google Photos with Nanobox enabled and a new "Photo Stream" album created on Google. """" This will be a feature in Android 6.0 ("Marshmallow"), and it is said it will be available as a mobile app for iOS users in the near future. The video is a light-hearted introduction to the upcoming feature. """" If you are interested in trying out this new feature before it is officially released, Google is encouraging people to download and run a new app called Lightbox. """" The app is currently only available for Android users, but Google says that iOS users should be able to have it as soon as next week. You can download the app from Google Play right now. """" Lightbox is already working for hundreds of thousands of people with its new photo-mapping feature. Now, it will also be able to send photos from your camera roll to the cloud in real time. By accessing Lightbox, you grant both Google and the camera manufacturer (likely Apple or Samsung) access to your camera roll. Google hopes this will be convenient for those who want to start an album in Lightbox, then add remote photos to it later. In other words, it will be convenient to start an album without being in Lightbox before adding the remote photos. An official video will
