The existing plastics are low-thermal conductive plastics. In order to improve the heat dissipation performance of the existing plastics, it is necessary to use a heat dissipater to absorb and dissipate heat of the existing plastics. However, the existing heat dissipaters cannot be reused. The above situation can be improved by applying the heating element to the existing plastics, thereby promoting the absorption and dissipation of the heat of the existing plastics. The elements can be used repeatedly and the waste of resources can be reduced, so it is of great significance for improving the environmental protection capability of the existing plastics and reducing the waste of resources.

In Swift 4, a good way of changing the launch image was: `let storyboard = UIStoryboard(name: "Main", bundle: nil)` `let vc = storyboard.instantiateViewController(withIdentifier: "Main")` `self.present(vc, animated: true, completion: nil)` but now it doesn't work in Swift 5 and I didn't find an alternative. Any help?
