...I think I'm not doing anything wrong, but it is taking a lot of time. I've got, for example, 234 different products. Also, if I try to find other products with this query: " It just takes minutes, while if I try to find only one product, it takes hours. When I started this project, I was only going to index a few thousands products, now, I'm already going over 500.000. Is there something I'm not doing right, or this is just the structure of the database? Any hint? A: Try to create a stored procedure in MySQL that will create an index on the product BEGIN CREATE INDEX idx_product_url_index ON pulse_espresso_g(url); END In this way, the index will be created automatically. The invention relates to a method of fabricating an integrated semiconductor circuit, and more specifically to a method of forming a fine metal wiring pattern (more than 0.5.mu.m in line width) using a dry etching technique. The integration of IC has recently reached a tendency of size reduction. As a result, it becomes a serious problem how to secure a sufficient integration in a limited area. In particular, it is necessary to fabricate fine-line circuits for a 0.25.mu.m rule of size. However, in the conventional fine metal wiring pattern forming technique, the formation of such fine-line circuit is prevented by a so-called contact hole filling or an insulating film burying phenomenon. For example, if copper is used as an interconnect material, a thin titanium nitride (TiN) film is usually formed on the copper and the copper is patterned by a reactive ion etching (RIE) process. After that, the copper is metalized by chemical vapor deposition (CVD) to form a circuit. However, a void or a seam is easily formed in the pattern through the titanium nitride film. Therefore, for example, in a case where the titanium nitride film is thinned to prevent the above problems, the pattern width becomes narrow and a distance between contact holes is shortened. As a result, the depth of the contact holes cannot be made sufficiently large and public/$1 [L] On February 16, three employees of "The Onion," the satirical news and culture website owned by the ailing, empire-straddling Chicago-based conglomerate American Media, resigned after an undercover investigation at the publication revealed that it had engaged in a corporate cover-up of a sexual harassment claim by a former employee. The revelation was a shock even for those of us at The Intercept whose research has followed the site for years and whose reporting has led to the resignations of two “Onion” executives in the course of the past year. The story also represented a remarkable moment of clarity for those of us who had long been concerned about rampant sexual harassment at the publication, and about the resistance of the larger media industry to address it. What followed was a blizzard of news stories and blog posts decrying the behavior of the so-called “Onion Media Group” for weeks, with most attention focused on the company’s more than 30-year relationship with so-called “national security reporter” (and former chief Pentagon correspondent) Anthony Deutsch, who has been accused of sexual harassment by three different women, along with their employer and a former colleague, Owen Thomas, the editor-in-chief of the site’s multimedia vertical, Clickhole. Deutsch did not respond to a request for comment from The Intercept, but he has issued an apology that has not been made public and reportedly marked the first such admission by any “Onion” official. As Robert McMillan, a former contributor to the Onion, summed up the prevailing view in an April 11 Huffington Post op-ed headlined “Why Is It OK That I’m Not Allowed to Discuss Anthony Deutsch’s Sexually Harassing History?”: “Why can’t I discuss this? Why aren’t journalists treating this as the serious crisis it is? It’s very simple: I worked for The Onion for a long time, and none of these allegations were known to

A short work of six works (including Concerto Exotico for violin and orchestra) by Manuel de Falla, an extremely interesting and important composer of Spanish music. The Concerto Exotico for violin and orchestra makes up the second part of the work and is set for two violins and two percussionists. This movement is called "inversion" because the violin and the orchestra play simultaneously, as if to "invert" the orchestra and give prominence to the violin. This composition is an interesting and complex work, very different from what the listener would expect to hear in the context of this concerto.

Secondary organic aerosol in a mediterranean area, Spain. Aerosol sampling was carried out in a city in the province of Alicante, Spain, from May 1998 to March 1999 in order to evaluate the factors that influence the formation of secondary organic aerosol (SOA). Among these, surface enrichment and atmospheric aging were studied using an array of techniques. Samples were collected over a 24 h period in six sites located in the centre of Alicante, from both indoors and outdoors. The study shows that aerosol was mainly enriched in the upper region of the atmosphere (UVA) (0.5-1.5 km) due to resuspension processes induced by high traffic density (population about 600,000). Contrarily, much higher concentrations of aerosols were found in the lower region of
