Multi-slice image reconstruction and Decomposition Using Chirp Functions and Kalman Filtering. A multi-slice image reconstruction algorithm based on chirp functions and Kalman Filtering is proposed for Echo-Planar imaging (EPI) in this paper. The new algorithm is compared with other reconstruction approaches by designing the speedups. The speedups are calculated by comparing three methods: the proposed method, the modified Cartesian method, and the filtered back-projection method. The experiment is performed on a 3D phase change object on a Bruker NMR 400 MHz using a 3.2 T scanner, and the speedups are shown to be 0.93 to 1.32 for reconstructed results, compared to a speedup of 1.00 to 1.15 for the filtered back-projection method. The effect of acceleration factor A, and the effect of image cutoff frequency of the chirp filters, are analyzed through simulations. Further differences in secretion of 2,4,6-trinitrotoluene and its derivatives from rat submandibular glands. The major excretory components of submandibular gland secretions from rats fed solutions containing 2,4,6-trinitrotoluene (TNT) for 5 weeks were isolated and their compositions determined. In the following procedures (1) nitro toluene was first converted to nitro-substituted benzylamines by mild acid hydrolysis and subsequent reaction with benzylamines were fractionated by thin-layer chromatography and purified to homogeneity by preparative high-performance liquid chromatography (HPLC). (3) Homogeneous nitrobenzylamines were examined by HPLC coupled with a diode array detector. The results d0c515b9f4
