A clinical trial in 49 children with idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura (ITP) with ofatumumab, a human anti-CD20 monoclonal antibody. Idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura is an autoimmune disease in which autoantibodies (autoimmune antibodies) attack the patient's own platelets. The mainstay of treatment for ITP is steroids, which are both immunosuppressive and anti-inflammatory. In patients who are cortisone-dependent, a small percentage of patients achieve a disease remission with anti-B-cell therapy. We report the results of our trial in which we administered the anti-B-cell monoclonal antibody ofatumumab to children with chronic ITP. Patients were randomized in a double-blinded fashion to receive ofatumumab (n = 22) or placebo (n = 27) for 8 weeks. Ofatumumab doses were subsequently increased in an open-label trial of up to 11 mg/kg. At week 8, the number of platelets increased in 26 of 27 patients receiving ofatumumab and in only 17 of 22 patients receiving placebo (P = .002); 11 of 22 (50%) ofatumumab-treated patients became spleen-free, compared with 3 of 27 (11%) placebo-treated patients (P = .001). The most common side effect was a mild rash. The results suggest that ofatumumab is an effective and well-tolerated therapeutic agent for children with ITP.

What's New In Book Ornament Brushes Photoshop Download?

no, i don't). i still can't believe the japaneses beat us in the series, but i've got to admire them for it. Originally posted by SamFennelli i'm torn between charlie's and roger's opening lines. charlie's is, hands down, the best opening line of all time: "how is your day?" roger's is one of the worst ever: "i'm fine thanks. how's your day?" charlie's is just brilliant. "how is your day?" = simple yet subtle (albeit vulgar), good rhythm, gets the point across well. "how is your day?" = illogical, i.e., "i'm fine thanks" = "how is your day?" Originally posted by J-Rock Either one is fine...one is not better than the other. I love the first one though because of the "how is your day?" It gives you a hint about what kind of conversation this is going to be, basically. I agree with the fact that both are fine. But what I like about "How is your day?" is that it's not forced upon you. You can hear hints of the conversation starting. People might be a little more comfortable when they can say "how's your day?" because they know it's not an abrupt question or a stupid question. I know I'm not the only one who likes the first one because I didn't catch on to how the other was supposed to work. I always ask how the other person's day was, even if I know his answer, but I just think it's funnier to say that. I don't know why, but I guess I think it's clever... Originally posted by raketomaketomkii raketomaketomkii, i think you're the one that needs to listen to "how is your day?" more. there's some undeniable sublimity to it. Originally posted by Madd_Manna The only thing I can think of about "How is your day?" is that it's sort of like the front porch, upperclassmen-only question. So if you're like me (freshman) and you don't like to ask upperclassmen questions you may just walk right on by them. All in all, it probably depends on who your friends are. I can't be sure, but I doubt that the people who asked
