Pearl Harbor Village Pearl Harbor Village is a model village in San Bernardino County, California, United States. Situated near the Colorado River, the model village has been used for historical tours and can be rented for civilian or military use. History The only industrial manufacturing area in Southern California during World War II was at the Pearl Harbor Recreation Area, south of Camp Pendleton. Because of the industrial nature of the area, the Army made it a Target 3. In October 1958, the Army began to enlarge the Pearl Harbor Recreation Area (renamed Pearl Harbor Army Depot in 1962), building a nuclear munitions storage facility, barracks, warehouses, and a marshaling area. In 1974, the Army began to expand the area's industrial facilities to support its nuclear weapons storage mission. Over the next decade, the Army expanded its industrial facilities, allowing it to employ over 3,500 workers, and adding barracks, warehouses, and more than to the area. At the same time the Army was building the Pearl Harbor Village, the city of San Bernardino was setting out to revitalize downtown, building a park and cultural center, the San Bernardino Public Library, a baseball stadium, as well as developing the San Bernardino Sportsplex. The Army contracted the San Bernardino model town program, the principal of which were the four World War II model towns around Southern California. The first of these was Solana Beach. The Army replaced the Solana Beach project, and began building the Pearl Harbor Village d0c515b9f4
